

Campbell “Bowman” Fetzer | Associate

After completing his undergraduate studies at Georgia State University, Campbell “Bowman” Fetzer returned to his home state of Louisiana to work for his family’s construction company in Baton Rouge. During his time in the construction industry, Bowman handled large-scale commercial renovation projects and various new residential and commercial projects.

He went on to attend the Southern University Law Center, where he graduated with honors—Cum Laude, ranking within the top ten of his class. During law school, Bowman became a senior editor of the Law Review where he published his article entitled “Inverse Condemnation in Louisiana” which addressed controversial regulations affecting private landowners and their right to access public roadways. After earning his law degree, he was admitted to the Louisiana Bar and thereafter began practicing maritime and personal injury litigation in New Orleans. At Galloway Johnson, he now practices in the areas of construction, maritime, trucking and transportation, and insurance defense.

Bowman is licensed to practice law in Louisiana and is a member of the New Orleans and Federal Bar Associations. He enjoys rooting for LSU and the Saints, as well as hunting, fishing, and playing golf.
